NOTICES OF THE ENGLISH PRESS:

Mr. Amsworth has established for himself a very high reputation as a novelest, and his works are always airs to be marked by excelse a novelest, and his works are always airs to be marked by excelse in notices sufficient to demand for them a great deal of attention and popularity. To judge from this new story be fore us, the author has laid a good plot, and desplayed skill in the disposition of his materials. [Weekly Times.]

The author of "Rookwood," whose fame is of long standing as a powerful roomociet, has some more entered the field. His new story is something of deferent character to his former productions. The form representations to his more in the first few pages, which we were little prepared to expect, considering the author. No doubt the publication will be highly successful.
